

National Railway Museum Timetable Collections List

Version date: 2022-01-20

Introduction

This list provides a catalogue of the National Railway Museum Timetables Collection. It lists over 7500 individual documents and provides a resource that is of interest not only for railway historians, but also for local and family history, biographical research, and writers of historical fiction.

British Public and National Rail Timetables List – This covers timetables issued for public use by British railway companies and coverage is quite sparse during the earlier part of the 19th Century, however the Bradshaw's Guides which are in a separate part of the list provide coverage over much of that period. Coverage over the 20th century is relatively comprehensive for most companies.

British Working Timetables, Operating and Special Notices List - This is the largest part of the collection and incorporates many different types of documents that were issued for the use of railway employees in relation to the operation of trains. In addition to working timetables, it also includes the appendices to the working timetable, along with many other associated documents special train notices, periodical operating notices, platform working, carriage working and crew working notices. To make this long list into a slightly easier to navigate it has been sorted in the order of railway company, region, document type and then commencement date.

Continental, Irish and Overseas Guides and Timetables List – This covers mainly railway company issued timetables for overseas countries. This is not a core area for our collections, so it is a relatively short list. Please note that this does not include Bradshaw's Continental Guides which are listed separately. We have a limited number of Irish Railway Company timetables, but where the railway company was directly operated by another British railway company, such as the Northern Counties Committee (LMS), any relevant timetables we hold will be listed within the British lists above. Irish railways were also covered by the Bradshaw's Guides.

Bradshaw's and ABC Guides for Great Britain and Ireland – Having published his first combined railway timetable in 1839, George Bradshaw's Guides became a household name over the next 100 years and are still famous today even though the original Bradshaw's Guide ceased publication in May 1961. The guides provide a national timetable that covers both Great Britain and Ireland and are a valuable source of train schedule information where they are not covered by the railway company public timetables. This list also includes a small number of ABC railway guides and other miscellaneous timetables by independent publishers.

Bradshaw's and Thomas Cooks Continental Guides – Bradshaw's also published a regular Continental Railway Guide, as well as the timetables in part 1, there is also a descriptive section which acts as a guide for travellers. The list also includes a small number of Thomas Cooks guides.

Version Notes

This version was published on 20th January 2022 and supersedes all previous lists. It is a major update and is the result of a project to audit and catalogue the collection includes many new documents not previously listed.

1. Over 1200 previously uncatalogued documents have been added to the lists.
2. Locations – Box numbers have replaced shelf location references. Please do quote the relevant box numbers in this list when requesting material. A few items are included that are within the museum's documents collection and listed separately on inventory, when requesting these items, please quote the inventory number.
3. The Working Timetables list incorporates a new column, to provide further delineate the type of document so there is now a document type column, which provides a more generic category along with a more specific sub-type column. For example, working timetables are classed as a "Train Plan", while documents such as an appendix to the working timetable are classed as "Other Operating"
4. A number of errors including dates, descriptions and type of document have been corrected.
